Many Second Generation Japanese Win Fame on Stage, Screen and Radio; They Sing, They Dance ...

By LARRY TAJIRI

Occe in a great while a prince, his consort and his retinue sweep into town. Then there is much ado. Pings are recited and are strung along the thoroughfares with the al arguments arising, of course, as to whether the Amercian flag should be at the right or left of the Japanese banner. In the homes moth-bitten dress suits come for their periodical airing with much contemplation as to whether it will hold together for the ocon. And one must not forget top hais. They are an all-important detail. Before mirrors and private studies the fortunate few rehearse speeches and addresses. Lil' Tokyo spruosa up. Royalty, oslebrities are in their midst.

In a lighter entertainment world, probably the first Japanese chorus girl was Buth Seto of New York who was in one of Billy Ross's "Oracy Quilt" shows which toured the Middle West some time ago. Miss Sate has also been in the line of the New York production. Meanwhile, the most recent of the dancers seems to be Yuki Yebrzoto, sister of El Paso's famed Bally, who is with the Marous Show troupe. Two other nicel girl dancers, Ayako and Funiye Tanaka of Hollywood are with the Marcus showmen. The Marcus rorre is the one, of course, which caused such a sensation in land Chamber of Commerce. # Nippon Tries An Experiment With Trade

Nippon's Reciprocal Act on Canadian Trade of Interest

By HUGH BYAS

OKYO:-Japan's trade with Onsats has been selected for an experiment of great interest to the United States and other countries ittat sell more to Japan than they buy from her. The object is to find whether the nation's purchasing power as a customer can be d as a lever to break down the tariffs, dumping duties and other obstacles it meets as a seller.

In emence, Japan intends, because of Ganadian burdens on Japanese goods, to go elsewhere for raw materials she has been buying from Canada, These last year were worth 57,009,000 yen (about $16,-000,000 at present exchange).

Japan's international trade, broadly speaking, consists in the purchase of raw material and the sale of manufactured goods. As a buyer, I Japan, in her own interest, customarily admits her purchases duty free or lightly taxed. As a seller the encounters a very different state of affairs in the shape of high tariffs, dumping duties and Should Japan trade with America? The question has been raised by actual and proposed restrictions on Japanese exports to the United States and countries of Central and South America. On the one hand, American textile manufacturers, alarmed because Japanese sales of cotton cloth in America for the first three months of 1935 were approximately equal to those for entire year 1934, have appealed for protection. On the other hand, the Japanese Foreign Office recently expressed concern because self-imposed Japanese restrictions on the exportation of such articles as pencils, canned tuna fish, porcelain and matches had not averted agitation for restrictive measures against these exports in the United States.

Japanese exports to Central and South America have increased with spectacular rapidity—from 18,264,000 yen in 1932 to 104,752,000 in 1934. Haiti, Salvador, Guatemala and Costa Rica have recently taken measures or are contemplating measures which are calculated to limit sales of Japanese goods. These measures vary from equalization arrangements under which Japan is required to buy as much from a given country as she sells to it, to tariff increases and quota restrictions.

Some perspective in which to view these developments may be gained by asking a question: What would be the result for world economy if Japan should suddenly revert to the solation which it maintained under the Tokugawa Shogunate and disappeared, both as a seller and as a buyer, in the markets Some manufacturers of textile goods, pencils, tuna fish, electric bulbs and other articles in which Japanese competition is kenly felt would applaud the exit. But for many producers of cotton, wool, oil, rubber and other raw materials, the abrupt vanishing of Japan as a purchaser would probably eause a disastrous drop in the prices of such commodities. It would deepen a crisis that had one of its chief roots in the disproportionate fall in the prices of agricultural commodities and raw materials.

But of course Japan will not return to that isolation. Resed in one part of the world, Japan sion is almost certain to assume more vigorous forms in other regions. If Japan is abut out of America, one quite probable consequence would be an intensification of pressure to secure an absolutely dominant position in the Chinese market, with all the unfortunate consequences in the way of possible international friction which this might involve.

In considering complaints of individual American industries about Japanese competition, it should never be forgotten that America's trade balance with Japan was lopsidedly favorable to the extent of about 370,000,000 yen in 1934. Japan spent approximately 1,100,000,000 yen for cotton alone in America during the last three years. Discrimination against Japanese goods might quite conceivably injure more American economic interests than it would benefit because it would be only natural for Japan to transfer its cotton purchases elsewhere, so far as this is practicable, if it encounters insurmountable artificial obstacles in selling its goods on the American International trade is a fragile and delicate organism. On all-around balance it has certainly not benefited from the orgy of measures of control and restriction which almost all countries have been applying during recent years.—Christian Science Moniter.

Jiro Satoh, the Frenchman Merlin, They And Others Were Beaten by the Very Sports They Learned to Master

/ By R. Y. D.

While utmost efforts are exerted by the outstanding statesmen of the world to head off the booming lundencies of military and naval construction and to prevent dispules over the franches, rivalry in international is not only left alone, but encouraged. The outstanding international sport event is the Olympic Games which are held every four years. Davis Oup competition receives entries from more than 30 countries every year, Minor international competitions are held all over the world in different branches of sport.

Take the case of Japan. Besides ending teams to the Olympics, Davis Cup competitions and the International Student track and field mest, she has has baseball and golf teams to the United States and has been host to the track and field, swimming, beseinly, football and backetball teams from the United States and ice hockey team from Canada. She is soon to welcome the Yale university baseball n and the American swimming

There is no need to say that these enterprises have a bright ide for recommendation, Coming in contact in friendly rivalry brings understanding and friendship. Individual members of the gain benefit of broadening their knowledge and views. Yet, the fruits of these competitions do not always come up to the desired levol, sometimes developing unexpeoted results with bitter taste to all concerned. Hobnob over the awarding of the 1940 Olympic site, and dispute over the acceptance of the Manchukuo entries at the time of the Manila Par Bastern Olymsics are unpleasant memories which one would not like to see repeated.

Individuals who take part in these international events, when successful, win so much glory for themselves and the countries they like heroes from the battlefield. At the same time they shoulder so much responsibility that to them sport is not an enjoyment but a burden and strain. Sacrifice Too Great

Some of the players take sport as such and play with much ener-87 and nerves to spare, Lindley Murray and Johnny Doeg, when they won the championship they coveted, laughed and left. So did Gene Tunney and Bobby Jones. Perhaps they were wise. Most of the top-flight players, however, are those fellows who play with grim faces and nerves as taut as steel cords. What are the results?

These unfortunate turn of affairs may not be totally blamed on the keenness of competition. yet there is no denying that too much sacrifice is demanded of the younger generation who represent and who try to represent a nation, district, college and school in ataletic competition. Perhaps there may be some way of avoiding disaster before it is too late,-some way to ease the strain in topflight amateur play.

One of the French Davis Cup players, Merlin, made an unsucwful attempt to end it all with a glass of poison, Elisworth Vines fell on his face in total collapse at Antell and Jack Crawford, in his best years, tottered on the edge of a nervous breakdown, Who can deny that these young men were victims of tennis tension? Even such physical marvels as Johnny Weissmuller and Helen Wills Moody, it is said, could not stand the burden of international competi-

Their goodwill trip finished, the two dolls from New York are now on their way back to that city, having left Yokohama recently on board the Heian Maru.

We may hear about them once or twice more, but that should be about all.

I haven't read anywhere what's going to happen to mem after their arrival in Manhattan with their more than 50 presents. That, together with their landing on the Pacific Coast, will probably make up the one or two more things we're likely to hear.

But think of the things we won't

Already, we haven't heard the dolls' impressions of Japan, the Japanese people and Japanese culture. That's pretty good for a start. And we're not going to hear these things again when they get to their destination.

If there is such a mental con dition as being amused and irriated at the same time, then I am in that paradoxical state whenever I note one of the recurrent utterances of sensational American writers who say that war between the United States and Japan is inevi-table. Amused because these asser-tions seem to me ridiculously fantastic, and irritated because there is a likelihood that they may be taken seriously by the uninformed.

"American public opinion has undoubtedly been growing more and more anti-Japanese every year," says George E. Sokolsky in the leading article in the Pebruary number of Current History magadne. ### Anti-Japan Feelign

Now what sense is there in this kind of talk? Upon what logic is it based? It certainly is not borne out by the observation or experience of those Americans who have enjoyed common relations with the Japanese. Nor is it founded on a close study of the expression of Japanese sentiment for Americans. You may travel the whole length and breadth of Japan and not hear a syllable of disrespect for us or our institutions. If a general adverse sentiment existed, surely a visitor to that country would hear at least some whisper of it. In this How much more severely should country anti-Japanese feeling is confined to certain localities. The average right-thinking American admires the Japanese for their amiability and their progres-sive spirit. And in Japan it is quite evident that this admiration is mu-tual in spite of what this courteous people must consider our brus-que manners. Formerly the Japan-ese imitated English ways of living, dressing and performing business and social functions. Now they are copying us. They are more like us in most respects than are the Chinese, who preserve their ori-enalism down to the last degree, while the spirit of Japan is occidental.

Our government has made two mistakes in its dealings with Japan and in thereby creating even unintentionally the stigma so keenly felt by the Japanese, of being relegated to the position first, of an inferior race to be barred out of the country and, second, of a second-class naval power. Ambas-sador Saito told me that a naval more warships by either side.

The other mistake has been our failure to admit Japanese immi-grants on a quota basis—which would let in less than 200 persons

The correction of these two errors would "save face" for Japan and would heighten its esteem for Americans. But even as they stand they are not considered by the Ja-panese as sufficient reasons for a war. If by any chance we should become involved in such a conflict, it would be the result of jingo utterances and profiteering propaganda.

I agree with "Ace" in saying that a nisei is a "flop" if he or she is tickled pink because he or she cannot speak or write Japanese. In some parts of the United States, I know it is hard to learn the Japanese language on account of not being any schools in their vicinity. But nevertheless, I think that every Japanese person should study the language of our mother tongue.

In this day and age, I think that every Japanese person should study the Japanese language. This holds true especially to youths of today. We who are making up the second generation should make it our aim to understand and speak the Japanese language.

There are many reasons why we should consider the value of it to ourselves and to the public to study this language.

The Japanese language has certain refined qualities which other languages lack. There are customs and habits which have been handed down from generation to generation by those who have stu well. From it we can derive the refined quality of the Japanese

Much of the future depends on the knowledge of the Japanese language. Young people growing up will have better chances for employment and for advancement in other affairs in which we nise are concerned.

There are other things to consider about this language. A great deal of the commerce and trade of the present time is between the fellows use a bigger ball?" (Continued on page E-1)

His Hobby Was the Harmonica But What Could Poor "Taruzan" Do When He Was the Ninth for the Ball Team

By WELLY SHIEATA

"But honest, fellows," wailed Ta- hands up at that, the forer runan, wrinkling his forehead and then lifting up his eyebrows high, playing golf!"

Came the day of the big game. fore in all my life!"

Of course nobody believed him. Somewhere—possibly over a bot-tle of "sake"—the idea arose that the proof readers of the newspa-per should vie for supremacy with the linotype department in a base-

The latter's foreman accepted the challenge on behalf of his nine matrix men. Immediately a rally was held. Every one was enthu-siastic over the coming match, that is, every one except Taruzan.

Taruzan! That was not his real name of couse. On the census register it read Gonsuke Shimizu. But some people can no more avoid nicknames than can Huey Long avoid ballyhoo.

To begin with, Gonsuke was a siddlesized man.

And his size was mostly in the easier to imagine a hippopotamus starring in a tight-rope act than to picture Consuke leaping in agile fashion a la Weismuller, through the upper branches of an African jungle.

But Inoue, a fellow linotyper, drew attention forcibly to the fact that Gonsuke's silhouette stood out in bold relief like a "taru" or bar-

Considering his bulk, perhaps it was because it took him longer than most men to get mad clear

At any rate, it was a surprise for At any rate, it was a surprise for his colleagues to learn that Turuzan was 'apathetic' toward the horsehide sport. Especially in this day and age, and of all places in Japan—a land of many sports but of baseball notably, the revelation was not only shocking. It was unbelievable. believable.

"What is your hobby then?" ask-ed the foreman slowly, gently, as if talking to a recalcitrant child.

Had the answer been "wrestling" or "boxing" or even by the remotest chance "cating", his colleagues would not have batted an eyelash.

As it was, Taruzan answered simply: "Once in a while I play the

At that, Saburo, the skinny printer's devil, groaned. The foreman looked like a sunstroke victim.

But there was no way out of it. It had been agreed that a player could not be borrowed from ano-ther department. Moon-faced Ta-ruzan was the necessary ninth man. The honor of Alma Linotype was at stake. Reluctantly he consented to appear for practice.

One day's workout was enough to convince his team mates that Tarusan had been speaking the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

As a baseful please he made.

As a baseball player, he made a good flagpole sitte

"Listen, fellows," he blurted out suddenly. "I'm no baseball player." The silence was oppressive.

No one was unkind enough to retort—"And don't we know it?"

If a chain is as strong weakest link, as they say, then Ta-ruzan was a mighty frail connect-ion. In the scorebook, his K.K.K's looked like free publicity for the Klu Klux Klan.

As for Taruzan's fielding ability, the poet Coleridge prophesied it accurately when he wrote the familiar lines: "It is an ancient mariner and he stoppeth, ONE of THREE....."

Happily for the line men, their opponents proved worse dubs than anticipated. At that, it was no satisfaction to go into the last half of the ninth inning with the score g4-12 against them.

First up, Saburo, the skinny prin-ter's devil, singled. Next the fore-man flied out. Inoue was dead-balled, advancing Saburo to second.

Then it was Tarusan's turn.
As he strode up with dignity to the plate, brandishing his bat like an ancient samural getting ready an ancient samural getting ready to battle against the usual over-whelming odds, someone laughed drunkenly. There had been snick-ers before each time that Taruzan struck out, but this was a new, pe-culiar, irritating sort of laugh. In # Tarusan looked faintly annoyed.

The pitcher wound up. One ball.
Again that laugh. For the firsttime during the game, Tarusan's features clouded. He scanned the opponents' rooting section to discover the hechawer. As he did so, the ball whizsed past. "Strike orie!"

yelled the ump.

Now there is just so much the a man can stand. When the same irritating horse-laugh out thro the air again, it ired Tarusan. Wildly he swung at the next deli-

Claude Farrere Who Wrote "Battle" Pens a New Tome on the Far East

One of the best known French p To describe this remance of m living authors to the Japanese is Claude Parrere, author of "La Bataille," who has written a new novel called "Le Quadrille des Mers de Chine" recently. The book has been published by the Ernest Flamme. rion, Paris, last May.

Japanese juncer him through his Bataille, business this novel was adapted for a scenario name years ago, and the primaignal rule was played by Sudan Hayakawa on the alver across. The thems of his new novel is the Orient where he came some time during his youth as a naval officer. The story is an interesting remance concerning three young French name cadeta who lest Prance to take their missions on the Paidhed te, Prench war ship, which will wait them on the coast of the French Indo-China. However after they left France for Indo-Chins, the ship sailed without waiting for them. Then three ca-dets took a small boat from Indo-Ohina to catch the warship. On their chase after the warship, they met a pirate in the Sea of China and met with many experiences.

vigation, he depended on his title on the sea. In this matter, we can compare his realistic man describing the life of a sailor to Joseph Conrad in British literature. At the beginning of this novel, Claude Parrers stresses that the story took piece on the Sea of Chins off Singapore, at the end of the 19th century. This quadrille was danced on the sea long ago. Chude Parvers is one of the outoticism school of modern libers File first books were rensisted with enthusiasm. Very differe the lyrical Loti, Ferrere revealed issued a musicy of the dramatic novel. In the works which followed. Farrers painted vigorous Oriental settings Indo China, Japan and Turkey.

The literature on travelling is a modern tendency in Prench, literature and now in Japan, people are discussing this question recently. This tendency rose in France a long time ago during the 18th century. The works of Claude Parrere are good examples of the funotion of modern literature in France.

The "exorbitance" and "dis pation" arise, according to the Ja phnose side, in the application of the "exchange compensation dumping duty."

In press agitation in Japan it is erted that the effect has reduced Canada's purchases from Japan until they amount to only one-seventh of Japan's purchas from Canada. The statement i based on official figures which show that mat year, while Japan imported from Canada goods to the value of 54,083,630 yen, Ostado bought from Japan goods worth only 8,866,087 yen. But this ignores Canada's purchases or naw milk, which are now obtained through the New York market instead of directly, There are silter Japanese mankets in which the discrepancy is greater. Australia's purchases in the same period were equal to only 28 per cent of her sales to Japan, Sweden's to 25 per cent, Clermany's and Norway's to 15 per cent. In the case of the United States, the purcerstage was 68. It is obvious that if the purchasing power lever succeeds in the case of Canada, Japan will soon try it elsewhere,
